

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSIONS AND SUGGESTIONS

5.1 Conclusions

Based on the data on the previous findings and discussions, the total data that found in this study were 86 data that are scrutinized and categorized into 74 words (86.05%) and phrases 12 (13.95%). In the categorization of words draw out Noun 21 words, Compounds 8 words, Verbs 12 words, Phrasal Verb 3 words, Adjective 3 words, Clippings 10, Abbreviations 17 words (Blends 3 words, Acronyms 8 words, Back-formations 6 words. Otherwise, in the categorization of phrases draw out Noun Phrases 9 words, Adjective Phrase 2 words , Adverbial Phrase 1 words.

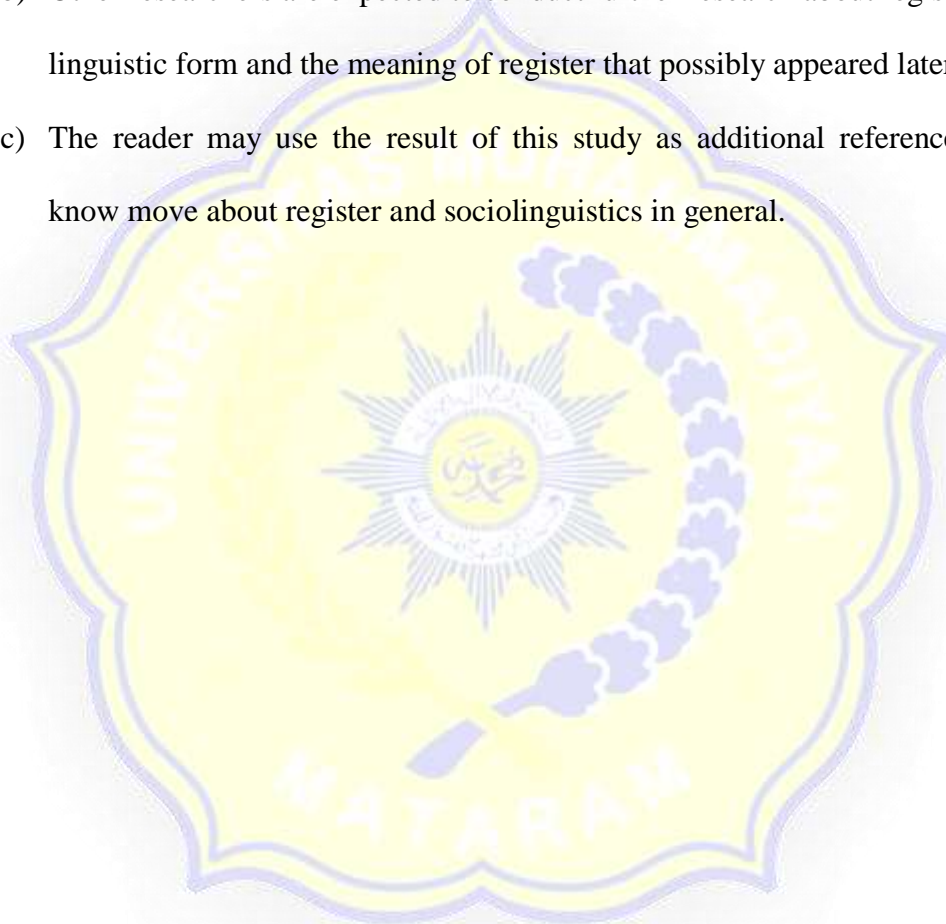

Later, the data have been categorized into register meanings e.g. lexical meanings and contextual meanings. As a result, this study figured out 51 data in the lexical meaning (60.71%) and 33 data in the contextual meaning (39.29%). Furthermore, the writer figured out type and functions of register in lexical meanings such as casual register 23 words, static register 11 words, formal register 15 words, and consultative register 2 words. In addition, the type and functions of register in the contextual meanings such as casual register 14 words, static register 2 words, formal register 14 words, and consultative register 3 words.

5.2 Suggestions

After seeing the result of this study, the writer offered some suggestions to be considered by those who were interested in studying about language variation (register) and making further research about it. They are as follows:

- a) The students of English Department should learn and investigate more about sociolinguistic regarding to language variation and register that occurs in their community/society.
- b) Other researchers are expected to conduct further research about register in linguistic form and the meaning of register that possibly appeared later on
- c) The reader may use the result of this study as additional references to know more about register and sociolinguistics in general.
