The article is sufficiently novel and interesting to the publication and adheres to the journal's profile. This study aimed to keep the quality of judges' decisions and reduce the burden of cases that accumulate in the courts (a case study at the Mediation Centre in Lombok, Indonesia). However, the content of the work and its construction as presented raises some reservations. Firstly, the introduction does not indicate clearly enough what the author wants to achieve by investigating the issue. Mere emphasis on the importance of the issue is not sufficient. The introduction should summarise the most important results of the research and give reasons for the undertaken problematic. Moreover, in the part concerning the review of available literature, no reference is made to the presented views within the framework of the undertaken issue. Therefore, there is no indication whether the author agrees with them or contests them. The research part - consists of only two sentences - is too superficial, does not contain the required content. The concluding part - contains a diagram and a short discussion of it. It does not contain a deeper summary of the views presented by the author in the article. The article from the structural point of view has a form close to a report (as it is defined in the final part - Acknowledgement), and it should be enriched with theoretical and doctrinal elements characteristic for the style of a scientific article. The graphical aspect of the paper also requires attention, as the tables and the scheme included in the concluding remarks have been moved and reformatted, as well as the style of the text (some sentences are too long, making it difficult to understand). Key words should be more specific to the subject matter.

The study discusses a problem of practical and theoretical interest: mediation as a way of resolving disputes. The need for a mediation center is argued through practical examples and this institution is proposed as an entry point for resolving disputes in civil (private) law and criminal justice (minor offenses).
